Initial toile for padded halter top. The general shape was successful however there were a number of issues highlighted that I set to resolve in my next toile. Reducing the stiffness through less layers of fusing, improving the lay of the stripes by cutting the twill weave fabric on the bias and extending the neck ties being my next objective.

Above pictured is my initial toile of the flap detail sailor trousers. This sample of the waistband and upper trouser legs was successful in my opinion, and through its creation I navigated the logistics of lining the waistband and flaps.

Jean Paul Gaultier Spring/Summer 2025 haute couture collection

Ludovic de Saint Sémir's "Le Naufrage" collection for Jean Paul Gaultier reimagines the house's legacy through themes of sensuality, gender fluidity, and mythology. Featuring corseted silhouettes, rope detailing, and sheer fabrics, it blends tension between structure and sensuality. The collection incorporates Gaultier's iconic maritime and bondage motifs, with precise corsetry, visible boning, hand-embroidery, and ropework. Bold proportions, exaggerated shoulders, and sculptural hips challenge traditional beauty standards, offering a modern, gender-fluid interpretation of Gaultier's timeless aesthetics.

High heels, suspender belts, silk underwear, low-cut bras, women were reclaiming as their own the most classic elements of conventionally sexy gear, and no one, or almost no one, saw it as representing a reversion to sexism.

Using Pleat shapes I had already sampled/considered, I wanted to explore how these pleats could interact with one another, as well as how various ties, trims and waistbands could function to develop on the layering concept.

To source good quality Jacquard/brocade fabric for this piece, I found vintage heavy curtains for bulk/volume. I also wanted to source second-hand where possible. I based the fabric to add rigidity & structure to pleats.

The first set of curtains I purchased turned out to be synthetic, so I couldn't dye them. Instead, I sourced a pair of vintage curtains and sublimated print onto synthetic curtains to match the fabric. I saved money & fabric.

OBJECT 1C - GLASS PERFUME BOTTLE

A GLASS PERFUME BOTTLE FROM MY ARCHIVE OF FAMILY HEIRLOOMS WAS THE INSPIRATION FOR THIS SAMPLE. I ABSTRACTED THE OBJECT IN CHARCOAL CREATING VOLUMOUS FORMS WITH SHARPLY ANGLED BUT SOFT LINES. I DRAPED THIS ONTO A MINI-MANNEQUIN IN LIGHT-WEIGHT CALICO, PINNING FOLDS TO CREATE A PATTERN FROM ONE PIECE WITH A SINGLE SEAM AT THE CB. THE LARGE BOX SHAPES IN THE INITIAL SKETCH BECAME GROWN ON POCKETS WITH GODETS. THE POCKETS WERE A WAY OF ADDING FUNCTION TO FORM AND WERE ALSO A NOD TO MY PREVIOUS RESEARCH INTO GARMENT DNA AND DE-CONSTRUCTIVISM.

Conflict of form

In mainstream fashion, tailoring produces a fashion garment by using standardized proportions and patterns. It fluctuates from season to season, from one designer to another, from one fashion fad to another. However, some forms of fashion are relatively stable in the application. Margiela intentionally uses asymmetric shapes and overlaps to provide a dynamic range of clothes, uneven hems, and extra clothing parts (e.g., third sleeve).

Intarsia is a type of knit where you can use multiple yarns or wools on a domestic machine to create an image you choose. Sampling above the normal domestic machine and on the right the chunky domestic machine.

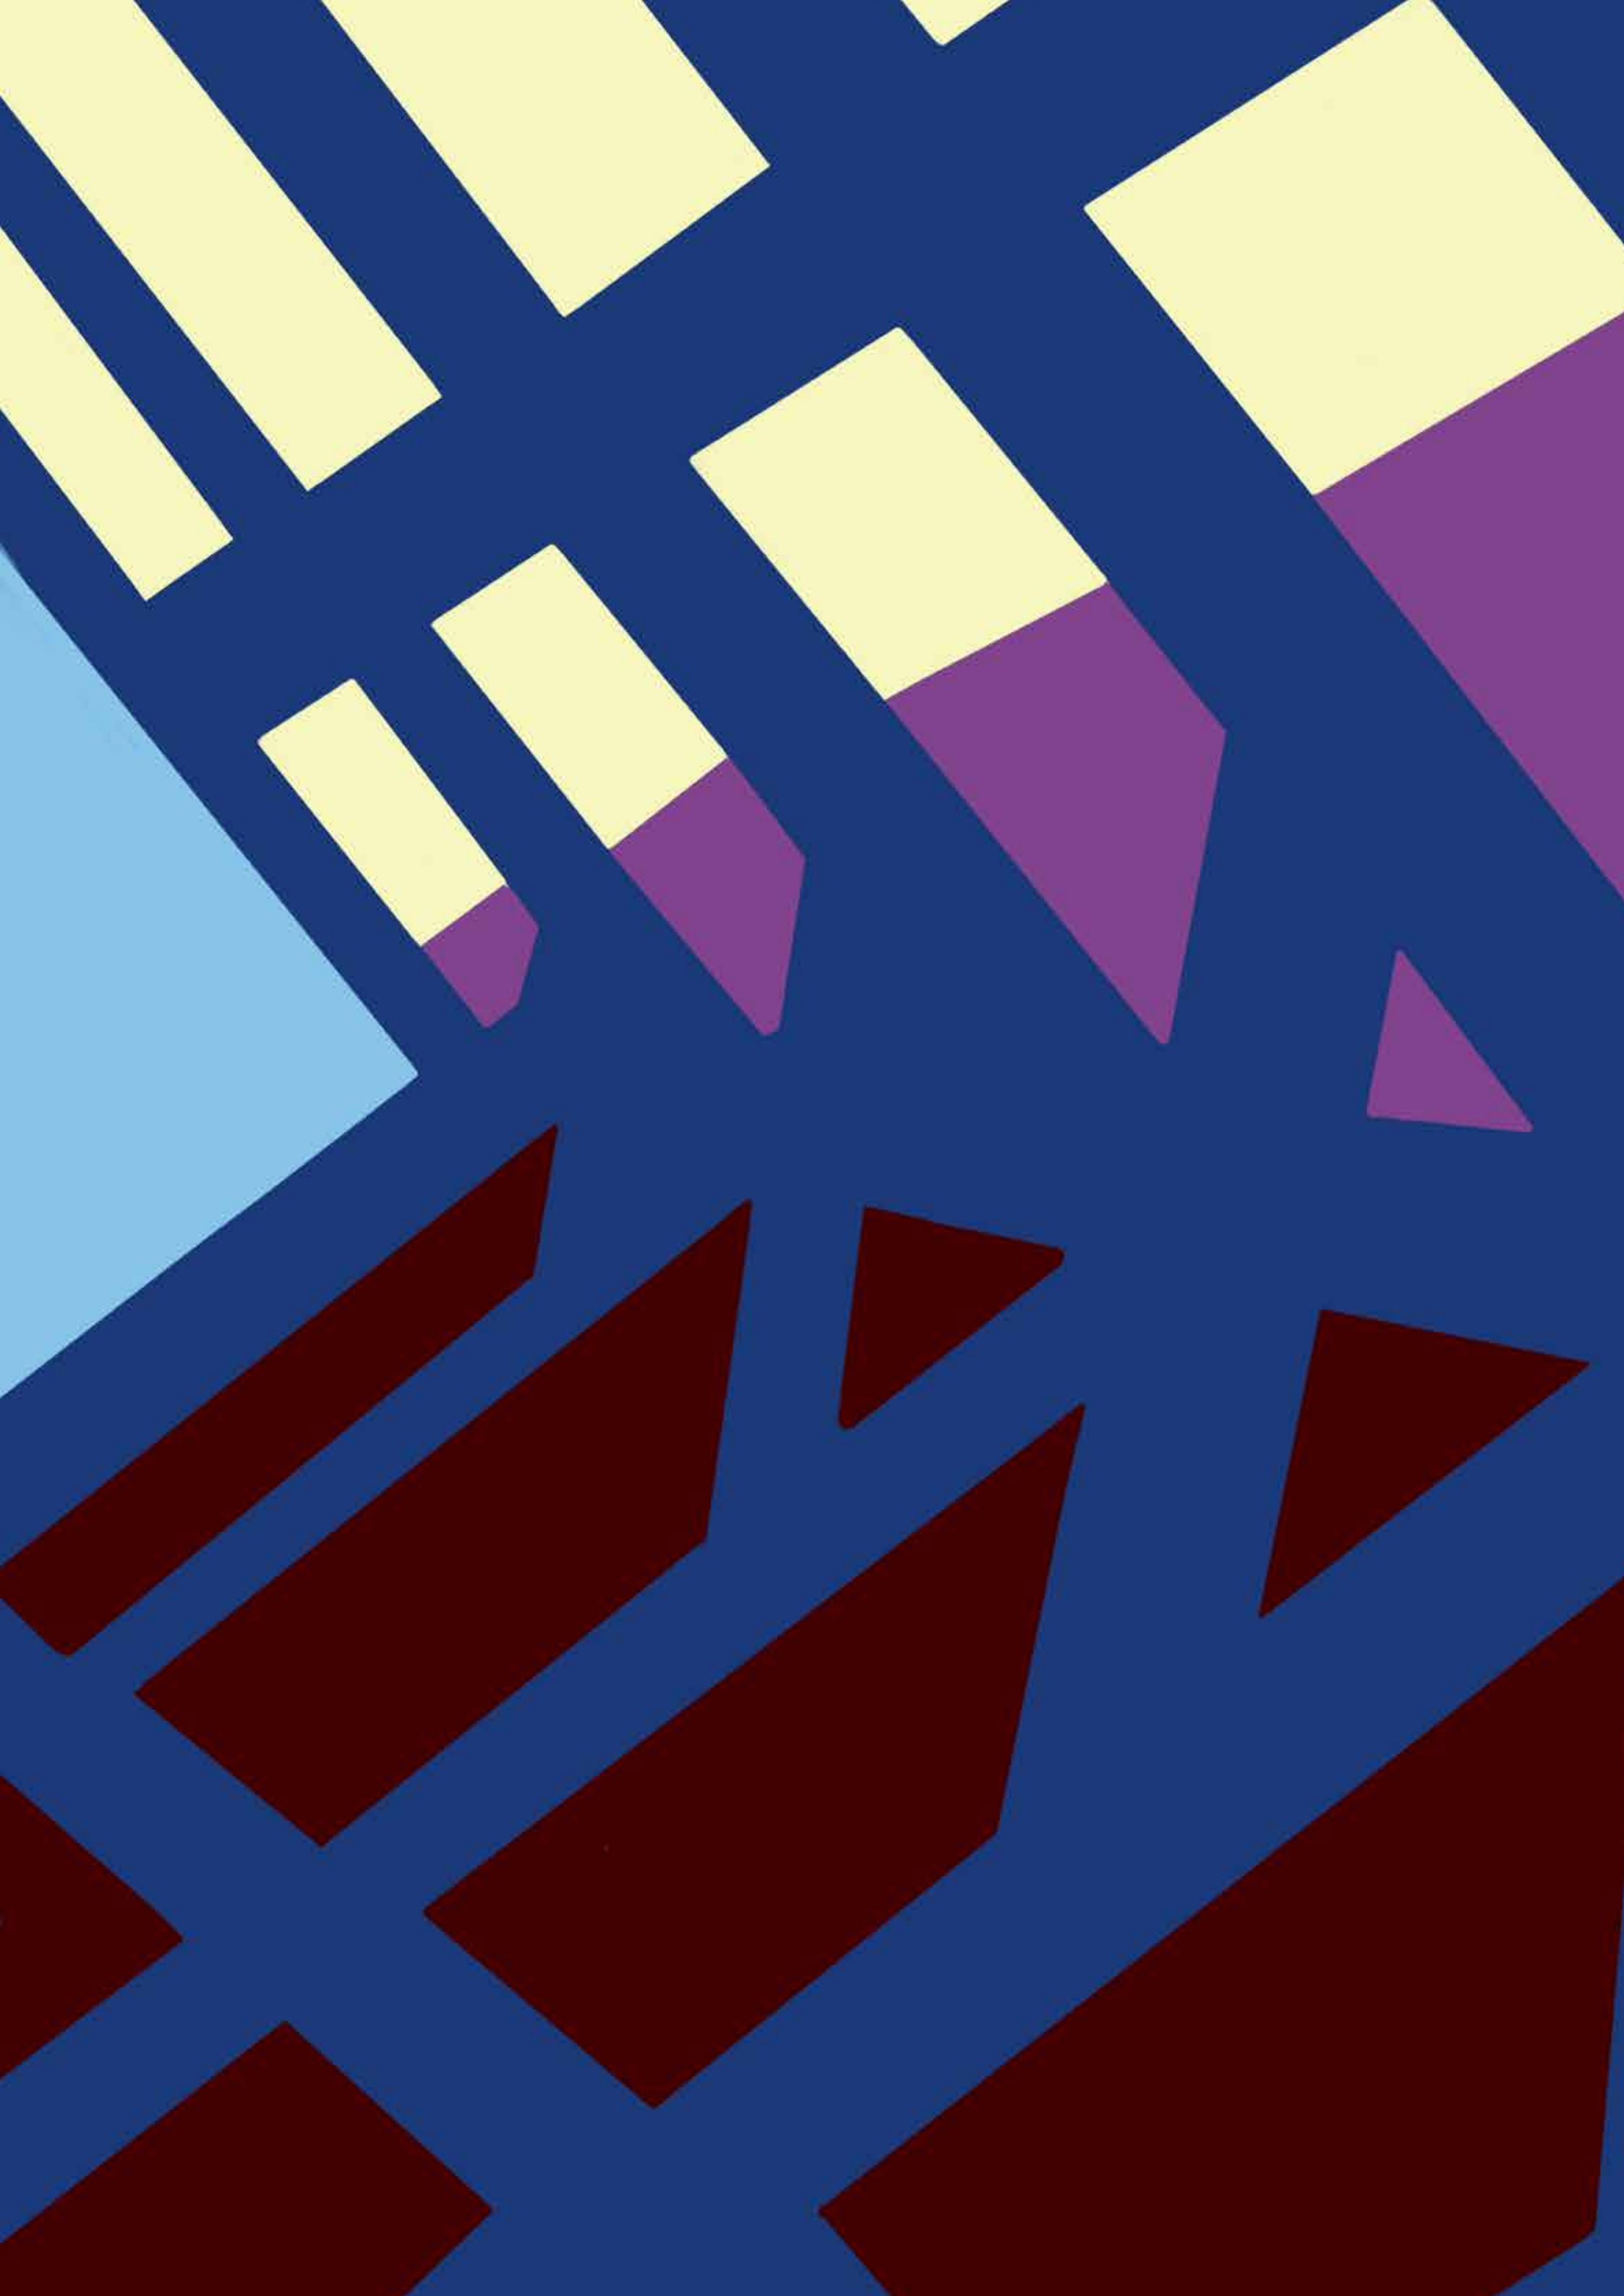

Working out how many needles and rows I'll need to create a 60cm x 42cm piece as well as when I'll need to change colours to match the print - working mirrored so the print is the correct way round.

Recycled waste material

This design collection explores the creative combination of materials by repurposing recycled inner tubes and clothing. By repurposing these elements, the collection transforms discarded materials into creative and wearable fashion pieces. Pairing durable rubber with soft, worn-in fabrics creates unique textures, shapes and forms. Each piece tells a story of sustainability and reinvention, challenging conventional ideas about fashion and material use. Focusing on uniqueness and conscious design, the collection promotes new ideas about waste and style. This collection is a clear statement about how discarded materials can be given new life through creative and artistic craftsmanship.

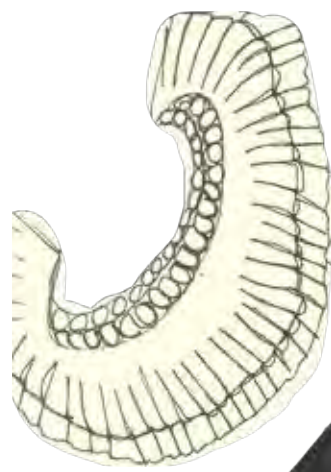

The needle lace, punto in aria and cutwork or reticella, established on costume by the end of the sixteenth century, made a smooth and almost imperceptible transition into the seventeenth. In 59 (a) A variety of compacted Dutch wooden lace used to make elaborate cuffs arranged in three layers. Thought to be Anne Marie-Louise d'Orléans (1627-93), by P. Mignard.

(b) Detail.
(c) An actual lace of this kind.

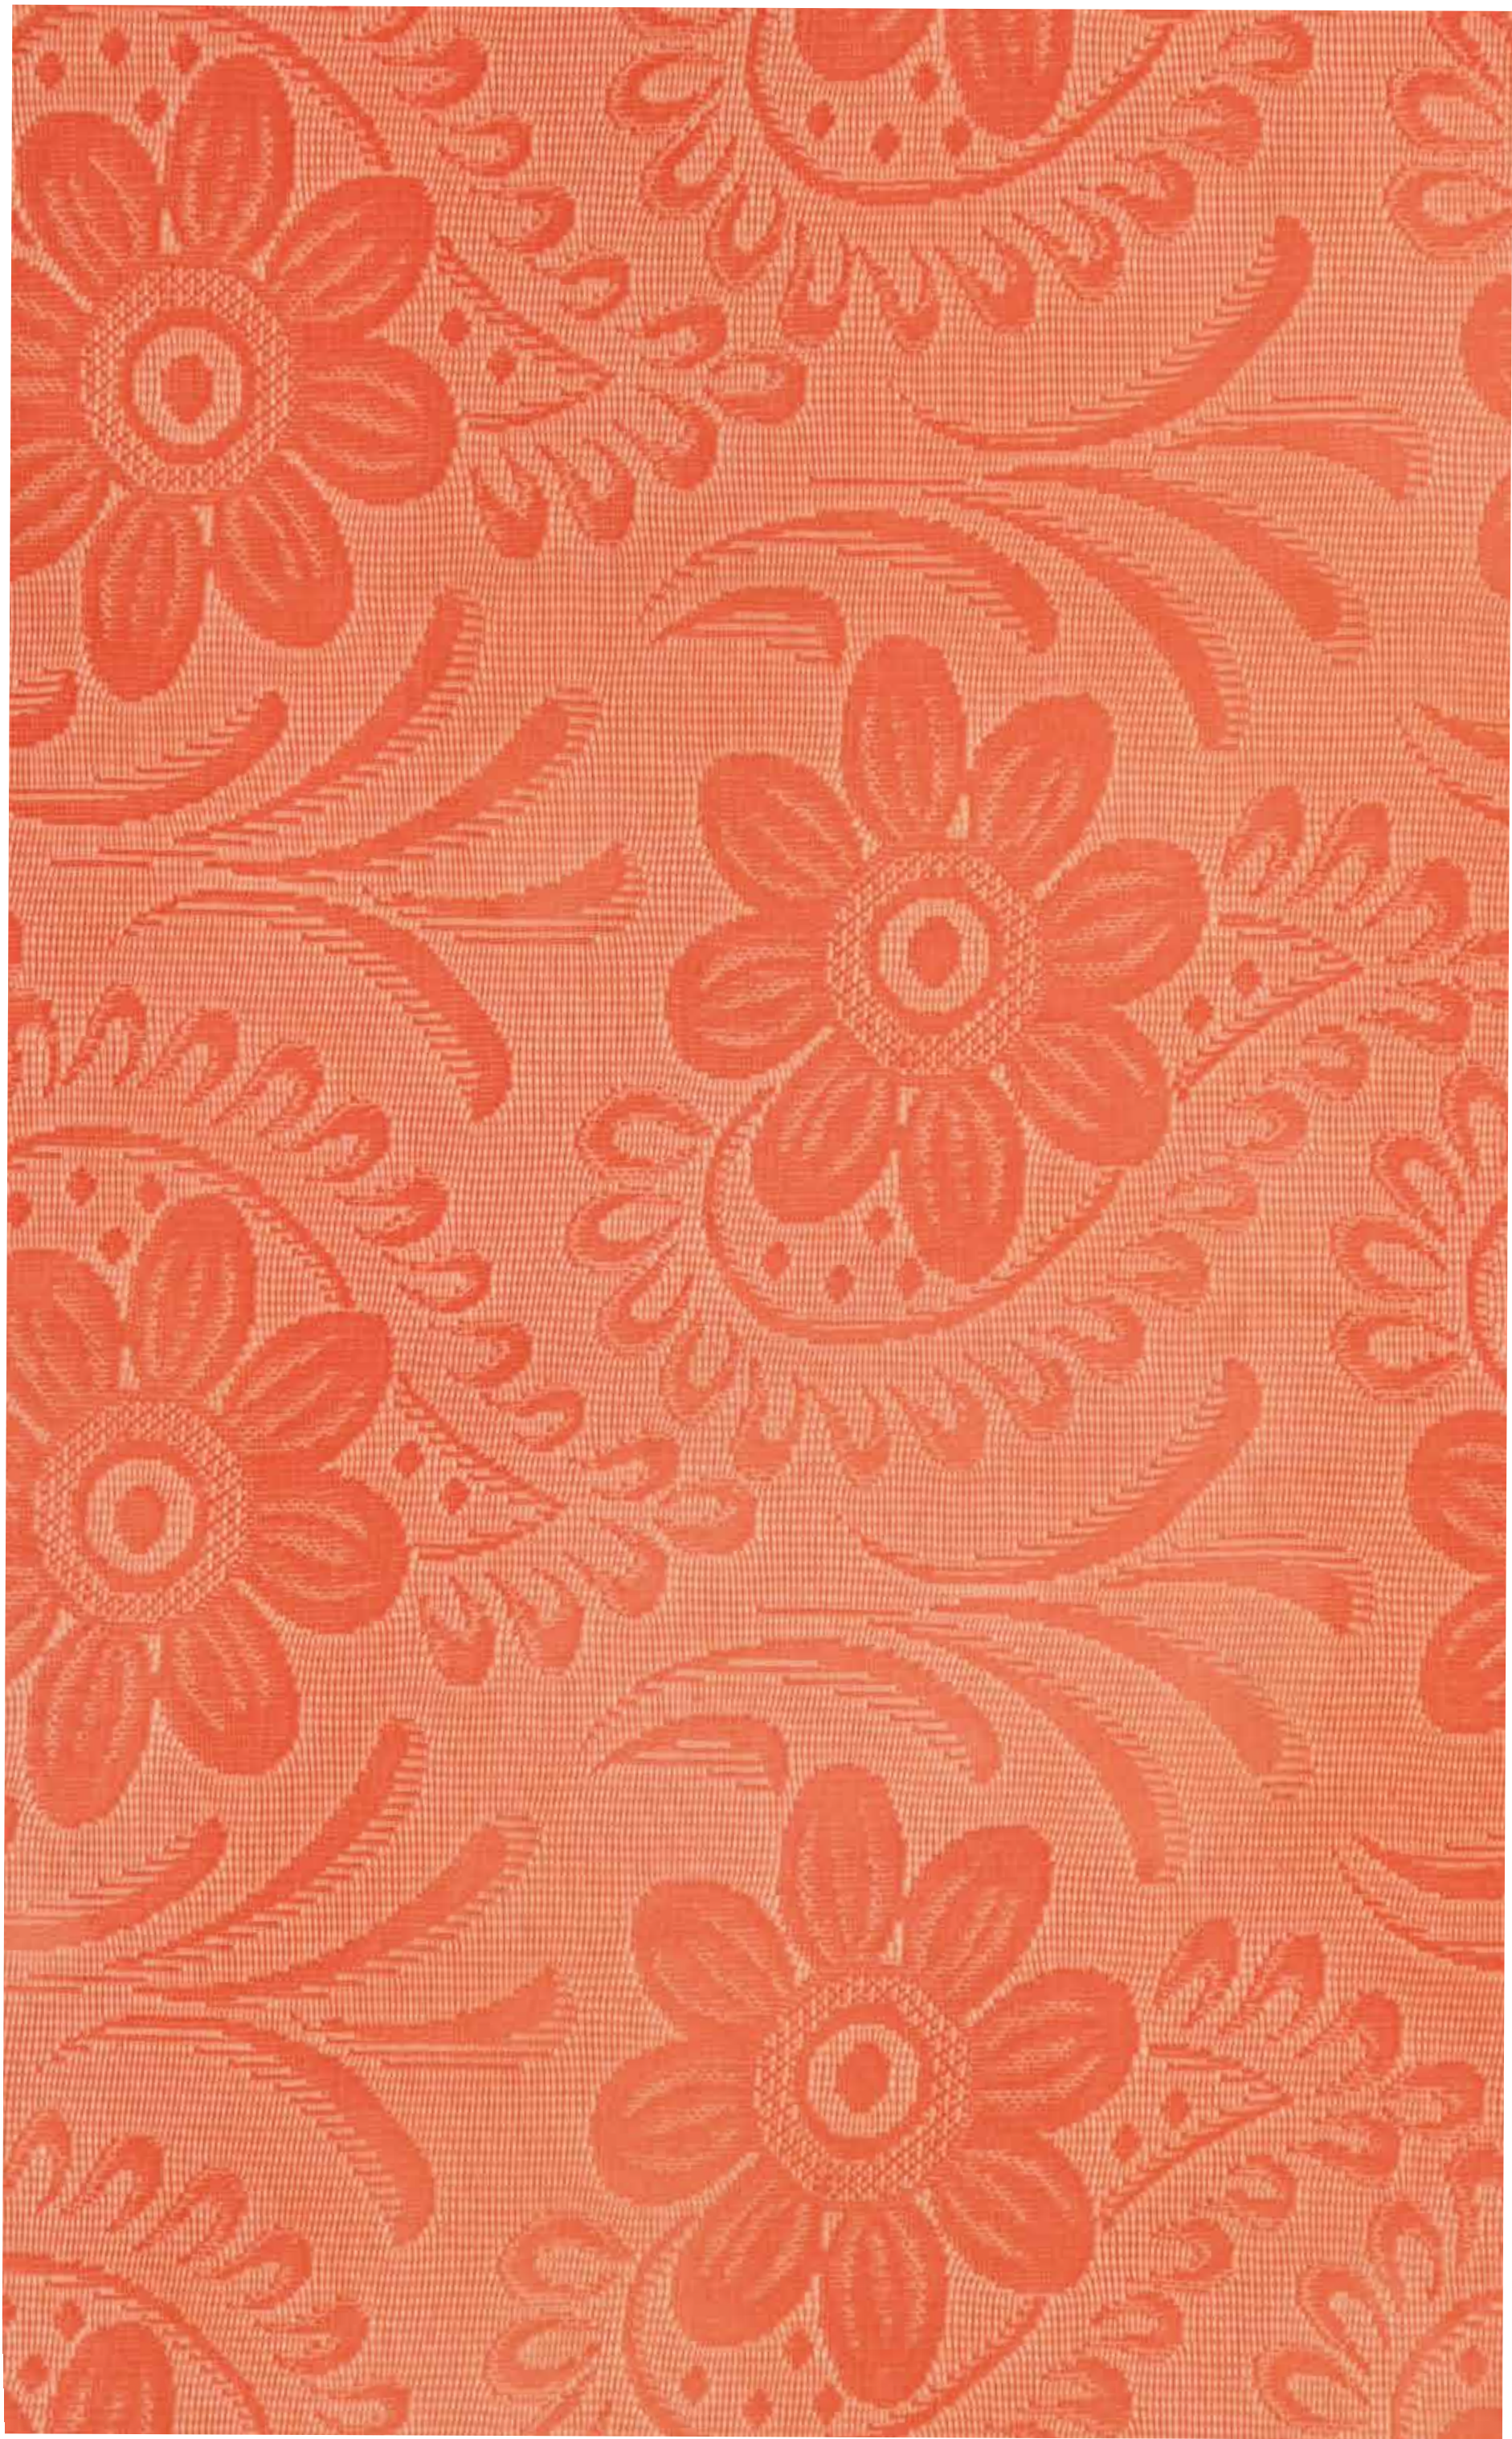

Only Marie de' Medici, nominally Regent, offspring of a middle-class banking family and money-conscious, attempted restraint, and in 1613 a law was passed prohibiting in particular the use of gold or silver, whether fine or counterfeit, and all lace of Milan, i.e. of Milan fashion,<sup>4</sup> suggesting that Milanese laces at this time were far richer than the linen laces which later in the century bore their name.

“All those suffocated heads, bulging eyes, and grotesque, waddling fungal growths scream with contempt!” Gilman

Drawing on the fungal imagery in Charlotte Perkins Gilman's The Yellow Wallpaper, this collection explores themes of decay, growth, and transformation.
